analyzes various approaches to regulation. Primary focus is on environmental law and policy; and the roles of Congress, the regulatory agencies, and implementing environmental mandates. In addition, environmental litigation will be discussed.

This course will be provided in an online format, as a result, the standards that were learned in DIS095 will be strictly enforced. Students will spend approximately five to seven hours per week participating in assignments and discussions. Ideally, you should log on to the course at an absolute minimum, five times a week, regardless of your schedule. The "week" in a distance learning class runs from Monday through Sunday. Assignments are due no later than midnight on the Sunday of the week. Furthermore, all assignments are to be submitted through Blackboard. Assignments that are emailed will not be accepted.

For this class not only will you need a computer with internet access, you may also need a video recording device in order to record your presentations. Additionally, make sure that your written assignments are saved as a .doc, .docx, or .rtf file and NOT a .wps or .txt document. Assignments submitted through Assignment Manager for any reason will be considered late until a corrected assignment is submitted.

VIII. ASSIGNMENT/LATE POLICY:

The "week" in a distance learning class runs from Monday to Sunday, so all assignments are due no later than midnight on the Sunday of the week in which they are assigned.

All assignments should use APA style, be error-free (grammar and spelling count), have one-inch margins, and include a cover page and reference page (if necessary). There's a link to the Purdue University OWL (online writing lab) website under the Web Resources tab to help you with APA style. WU also provides writing help through the Student Success Center. Just follow the tutoring link on the course home page or contact the SSC directly using the link under the Web Resources tab.

In this class, any student caught plagiarizing any class work of any kind or cheating in any manner will receive a zero for that assignment. APA requires a reference page and in text citations, failure to include both within your assignment will result in a plagiarized paper. Additionally, all instances of plagiarism will be reported to the university's administration.
